CLEVELAND, O., June 13 .- A train load of passengers on the Cleveland. Canton & Southern railroad had a miraculous escape from death in an acci-Cleveland & Pittsburgh lines, near Jones Avenue, this city, this morning, the entrance of the locomotive into their car, and a rush was made for the doorway, which by this time was at right angles to its usual position.

One by one, the mainjured climbed through the opening and were assisted to the earth by Patrolman Kelley. The injured were taken to the Jones' Avenue depot of the Cleveland, Canton and Southern road, where their wounds were dressed before their further removal.

Hev. Dr. D. H. Muller, of Canton, had his head and face cut and his nervous system greatly shocked. His seat was near where the locomotive came into the car, and it was a wonder he was not killed.

Wrecking trains were sent out, but it was several hours before the trucks were cleared, and traffic on both roads was suspended, the blockade being complete. The Oleveland & Pittsburgh train was in charge of Conductor Charles Rudolph and Engineer George Klarsgie. The engineer says that the target was set for him, and when close to the crossing it was changed to give the Cleveland & Southern the right-of-way. The passenger engineer and he both believed they had the signal to go ahead, and both had pulled out for the crossing.

RUN INTO A WASHOUT. Three Persons Killed by a Freight Wreek.

LOUISVILLE, KY., June 13.—At Bull creek, six miles above Maysville, last night, two dark clouds met and burst. The creek jumped over its banks and houses and their frightened occupants. The stone culvert of the C. & O. Canal over Bull Creek, was washed into the river, and about 12 o'clock last night,

Morris Ponsker and brakeman Charles Eaton are buried beneath the wreck, and their bodies have not yet been recovered.

A fast wrecking train on the way to the scene this morning, ran over Frank Scott, a colored employe, and killed him.
About a dozen persons living on the banks of Bull creek are reported drowned. The following bodies have been found: John Ruggles, a well known fisherman; Lucy P. Estler, a widow, and her two daughters, Bettie and Julia, and two sous. Several hundred people from two sons. Several hundred people from Maysville have gone to the scene of the disaster.

The nineteen cars down in the washout are mashed into kindling wood. The engine is new out of sight in the quicksand. The train was running over thirty miles per hour. Two wrecking Willey, of Morgantown, son of ex-Senathirty miles per hour. Two wreeking trains have been busy all day removing the debris. The workmen have just found two mangled bodies. James Irwin had a portable saw mill located up Bull creek, above the railroad. The clouds suddenly bursting caused a rise in the creek averaging two feet per minute, and it looked like a twenty-foot wall when it struck the railroad. Clancy, it is alleged, set the signal giving the passenger train right of way. The passenger train right of way. The passenger train approached the crossing, but the Cleveland & Pittsburgh locomotive did not slacken its speed. The express engine and half of the forward car were over the crossing when the freight locomotive struck the coach and crashed into its side. The heavy car was lifted into the air and then thrown on its side on top of the target-house, which was split into kindling wood. The target-post was thrown to the ground but the signal remained set for the Cleveland, Canton & Southern track. The coupling of the engine was broken and the locomotive of the train remained upon the target house, but the car was also thrown from the rails. The Cleveland and Pittsburgh locomotive, which is said to have caused the accident, left the track. The pilot had lifted the car and turned it upon the side after breaking through the heavy frame. Had the engine remained upon the rails it might have cut the coach in two. As it was, the damage wrought was heavy. The startied passengers were terribly frightened at the entrance of the locomotive into their car, and a rush was made for the door way, which by this time was a right angles to its usual position.

Yesterday's game with the Akrons was the slowest, most tedious and most uninteresting game that has been played here this season. Wheeling did not deserve to win it on account of their listless work. There was no ginger in the home team at all, and a great deal of apathy leafed around among the visitors. The only snap in the game was the oratorical performance of Orator Carey, Akron's second baseman. He is very chipper, but his remarks are amusing and entertaining. It took two hours and ten minutes to play the game, Umpire Jamison letting it drag unnecessarily; and the spectators became very tired towards the close.

Akron ought never to have had a smell; if Wheeling had been up to her usual mark. Fragerald was very wild, and in the sixth inning gave way to Joborne. The home team ran base like ice wagons, taking risks where there was istless work. There was no ginger in
